

How to get a pardon and cross the Canada-US border

There are many people that want to get into the United States, and the criteria needed for entry depends heavily on who the person is and where they come from. Canada shares a border with the United States, and Canadian citizens often travel to the US for different reasons. Whether it be work, family or just pleasure, Canada constantly sends people over. However, there are a lot of people that are prohibited from entering the United States due to the fact that they have a criminal record.

For a small mistake you are prone to having your border crossing privileges taken away from you unless you turn in a US waiver application form. The good news is that situations like this can be easily averted by having your criminal record wiped clean. This is done through a pardon which the Canadian government issues through the Parole Board. What this means is that a pardon application is submitted by those that have executed their sentence and are now looking to get a pardon. It is important to keep in mind that the sentence must be fully carried on before there can be any talks for a pardon in Canada.

There are a lot of situations where people will miss out on great job opportunities simply because they have a criminal record which marks a mistake they made a while back. In order to be eligible for a pardon, there are a lot of other criteria that need to be met besides having executed the sentence. Also, the process may take up to 6 months in which you have to handle paperwork and maintain communication with the government. All this can be very confusing and especially daunting for those that have never submitted an application like this before, which is pretty much everyone.

Luckily, you can hire a pardon agency to help you. These guys have all the information required on how to successfully submit an application, but also where documents need to be taken and so on. They will do all the running around for you as well, which means that you will literally have to wait until the various procedures are approved and finalized.

There is also the option of hiring a lawyer. Lawyers know their way around the law and also know all the small details and cracks in the system. They can be of great help while dealing with such an application because they know how to approach the situation and the most out of both your time.

Those that want to, can also do everything on their own. This will save you some money but will imply that you go everywhere personally and look up the entire procedure.
